History

This fort was at one time a stronghold of a powerful native Palegar Chiefs, who also caused the construction of the fort, later the fort passed to Vijayanagara and after them Adil Shahi. The fort situated on top of the hill, stretches over to three other hills called Iramma Gudda, Anarappana Gudda; and another hill name not known. Fortification contains two encircling walls, which has been strengthened by square stone blocks in its construction, its outer walls are massive and adorned with series of bastions at regular intervals. Inner fort has a entrance to east, but this does not have any gateway structure; to the south of this entrance is a rock, once there were steps to climb on top of the rock, where a square structure still exist, a number of figures have been carved on the rock. To the west of this rock is a kalyani called Sidilubhavi, which is below surface level, a crescent shaped wall covers the kalyani, in the same vicinity are some ruined structures. To the west of this building is a water tank and an arched door which leads to the south side of the fort, adjacent to this door is a circular bastion. To the south inside the fortification are remains of a ruined structure.
