History

The temple is built at the western side of a large cistern, styled the sat baoli or the seven cisterns. The temple is a trikutachala with three shrines with ante-chamber on three sides towards the east, the west and the south, a hall with a music mandap and a porch. The image of Vishnu in the western shrine is beautifully carved. The eastern one has a linga. The shrine towards south has a Vishnu image. The carvings on the exterior of this temple, representing figures of deities and animals, are elegant and among these the figures of elephants are particularly striking.
