History

This is situated towards the east of Venkateswara temple. The temple is built inside a spacious courtyard. On entering the court one sees a temple to his right and another in front. The plan of the temple on the right consists of a garbhagriha, sukanasi, a narrow corridor and a small room. A linga and an image of Kumara are installed in the garbhagriha. The temple in front, towards the south, is entered by a small door. It consists of a hall with three shrines on three sides, towards the east, the west and the south, each cella is attached to a sukanasi but the dimensions are very small. A large Nandi is placed in the sukanasi of the eastern shrine. A linga is installed in the western shrine and the southern one has an image of Vishnu. The doorway of the western cella is most elegantly carved, particularly the female figure at the right end of the frieze.
