History

The temple consists of a garbhagriha with an open antarala on the north, an oblong ankana, a navaranga and two mukhamantapa one on the north and another on the east. The garbhagriha doorway has pilasta sakhas with projection and recesses consists of a garbhagriha with an open antarala on the north, an oblong ankana, a navaranga and two mukhamantapa one on the north and another on the east. The garbhagriha doorway has pilasta sakhas with projection and recesses. Its doorjambs have dvarapala on the left and Venugopala on the right. Venugopala and dvarapala are framed in prabhavali and torana ending in kritimukha. The lalata has a Gajalakshmi. The kapota projects prominently and is curvilinear in section. The pediment has fine turrets in Rekhanagara style. At each end is a lozenge and the intervening space is decorated with lions and garland bearers. The ceiling of the antarala is of a lozenge. Flat slab at the top has domical flower framed in a star in high relief. There is an oblong bay, as wide as the navaranga in front of the antarala. There are four niches here, two in the north wall and one each in the east and west walls. One niche has a Naga stone and another a mutilated sculpture of Vishnu reclining on Sesha. The central ceiling of this bay has a lotus framed in a star. The remaining two ceilings are flat and plain. The navaranga has openings to the north and east and have a kakshasanas. Each kakshasana has two lathe turned pillars.
